Osborne backs American Football!

London.—British chancellor George Osborne has held talks with NFL officials and pledged government support for a London-based American Football team, the Evening Standard newspaper reported yesterday.

The NFL has staged a series of games at Wembley since 2007, attracting near-capacity crowds. London's premier stadium next hosts the Detroit Lions and Atlanta Falcons on Sunday. "One of London's massive strengths is its sporting prowess, its great football (soccer) teams," the Chancellor told the London newspaper in an interview.

"This is primarily a decision for the owners of the clubs and the NFL organisation but I've said to the NFL that anything the government can do to make this happen we will do, because I think it would be a huge boost to London." Osborne said he would take his son to one of the NFL games coming soon to Wembley, and that he felt there was a very real chance for the British capital to get an NFL team.
