Nigel Farage named "Briton of the Year" by The Times

LONDON. UKIP's charismatic beer-swilling leader, Nigel Farage, has been named "Briton of the Year" by The Times after an unforgettable 12 months that saw his party emerge as a mainstream political force.

The man dubbed 'Teflon Nigel' by his colleagues ('because criticism doesn't stick') has watched his eurosceptic party grow in support over the past year, winning the European Parliament elections in June before waging a guerilla war on the political establishment that saw the defections and subsequent by-election wins of MPs Douglas Carswell and Mark Reckless.

And the 'game-changing' Farage was named "Briton of the Year" by The Times, who said that traditional parties had "not been able to ignore" the rise of UKIP, who had "broken into the mainstream".
