BRITISH POLICE TO BE DEPLOYED TO BALEARIC RESORTS

● The officers will provide assistance to and act as a liaison with the Guardia Civil when British nationals are victims of crime.

● The two officers will always work together and patrol with the Guardia Civil.

Palma.—Starting from Monday, British police officers will be supporting the Guardia Civil in Magaluf and San Antonio on a two week trial this month.

Two officers from West Midlands Police, a sergeant and a police constable, will patrol alongside Spanish colleagues in the resorts as part of their annual summer tourist security initiative. The trial, funded by and planned in conjunction with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), will build on an already successful initiative run by the Guardia Civil that sees their officers policing various tourist hot-spots with colleagues from France, Germany, Italy, Portugal and Morocco.

Heath claims “did not halt brothel case”

● An allegation about ex-PM Edward Heath was not the reason why a case against a brothel keeper in the 1990s was halted, the case’s prosecutor has said.

In a letter to The Times, Nigel Seed QC said it was a lack of evidence that stopped the case against Myra Forde.

He said she intended to allege that she had provided rent boys to Sir Edward, but she has denied this was her plan.

Gloucestershire and Thames Valley forces are the latest to say they have received information about Sir Edward. Thames Valley Police said the information it is investigating was received following media coverage about the historical allegations made against Sir Edward. Gloucestershire Constabulary said the claim they received has been referred to Operation Hydrant, which is overseeing police inquiries into historical child sexual abuse.

The Metropolitan, Wiltshire, Hampshire, Jersey and Kent forces are conducting separate inquiries into the late MP.
