Spain's Socialist leader hopes for confidence vote in March

● Spain's Socialist leader Pedro Sanchez said yesterday he hopes to have reached an agreement with other political parties on a coalition government by the end of the month and hold a parliamentary confidence vote at the beginning of March.

Sanchez made the comments after a half hour meeting with acting Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy to discuss a possible pact between his centre-right People's Party and the Socialists.

Growing calls for Britain to pull-out of the European Union.

EU refines UK offer; up to Cameron now to clinch deal

BRITISH and EU negotiators agreed much of a reform package yesterday to help keep Britain in the European Union, leaving Prime Minister David Cameron to settle tricky final issues, notably on migration, at a summit next week, diplomats said. After talks in Brussels among officials from all 28 member states to review mostly minor amendments to proposals made by European Council President Donald Tusk last week, an EU source reported "good progress" in clarifying technical, legal issues.

"But main political issues are still outstanding and they will have to be dealt with by leaders next week," the source added. See Full Reports Inside
