THOMAS COOK EXTENDS SHARM EL SHEIKH CANCELLATIONS

Holiday ban

● Holiday company Thomas Cook extended its cancellation of holidays to the Egyptian resort of Sharm el Sheikh until 31 Oct., meaning the destination will have been closed to British arrivals for almost a year.

Britain advised against flying to the airport last November after the suspected bombing of a Russian passenger jet in October 2015 killed 224 people shortly after it had taken off from Sharm el Sheikh airport.

British tourists at the resort were evacuated after the crash. No regular flights have operated there from Britain since 4 Nov. due to concerns about security at the airport. Thomas Cook said it would extend its cancellation from 25 May because it had no clear indication when Britain might change its travel advice. Rival tour operator TUI Group has a cancellation in place on its flights between Britain and Sharm el Sheikh up until 25 May.
