Britain will not rush to trigger divorce proceedings with the European Union, a leading ally of incoming Prime Minister Theresa May said yesterday as David Cameron bowed out at his final cabinet meeting. May, 59, will today replace Cameron, who is resigning after Britons rejected his advice and voted on 23 June to quit the EU, plunging the country into political and economic uncertainty. Madrid.—The British Embassy in Madrid announced yesterday that a new web-page had been established aimed at British expats.

The site clearly states: "The negotiations to leave the European Union may take up to 2 years or more. "The British government has made clear that we want the legal rights of British nationals living in European countries, as well as EU nationals in the UK, to be properly protected.

"In the interim there will be no immediate changes. During the period of the negotiations, the UK remains a full member, entitled to all the benefits and obligations of membership of the EU."

• British nationals can continue to travel freely within the EU using a UK passport.

• There will continue to be no visa requirements for British nationals entering another EU country.

• British nationals can continue to access healthcare during temporary visits to EU countries using the European Health Insurance Card.

• British nationals retain their legal status as EU citizens and can continue to work and live in EU countries.

• British nationals can continue to receive healthcare in EU countries.

• British nationals can continue to retire and collect their pensions in EU countries.
