Member of armed forces arrested in Northern Ireland terrorism investigation

LONDON. The arrest of an armed forces member in Somerset yesterday over Northern Ireland-related terrorism has been followed by searches in Larne, County Antrim.

The 30-year-old man was detained by officers from the Metropolitan Police Service's Counter Terrorism Command.

The Met is working with Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI), which is conducting the searches in Larne.

It is understood the arrest and searches are connected to two arms dumps near Larne earlier this year.

In March, the PSNI said they had uncovered a "significant terrorist hide" of bomb-making components and explosives at Carnfunnock Country Park.

In May, a second significant arms cache, including an armour-piercing improvised rocket and two anti-personnel mines, was found at Capanagh Forest, near Larne.

Both of the weapons dumps were suspected to be linked to dissident republican paramilitaries.

Yesterday afternoon, at least two properties on the Old Glenarm Road in Larne were searched by PSNI officers.

Detectives in England are also carrying out searches at an address in South Devon.

The man under arrest is suspected of being involved in preparing for acts of terrorism.
