London fire blaze likely killed at least 58 people, say police

London.—At least 58 people were likely killed in a fire which engulfed a London tower block earlier this week, police said yesterday. If that death toll is confirmed, it would make the Grenfell Tower blaze the deadliest in London since World War Two. “Sadly at this time, there are 58 people who we have been told were in Grenfell Tower on the night that are missing and therefore sadly I have to assume that they are dead,” Commander Stuart Cundy told reporters. Cundy added that the figure could change. Police had previously put the death toll at 30.

“The figure of 30 that I gave yesterday is the number that I know, sadly, have, at least, died. So that 58 would include that 30,” he said.
