WATCH OUT

Palma.—A holiday home owner told yesterday how her husband's priceless watch was snatched from his wrist while they were walking in Andratx with the thief escaping on a moped.

"In a flick of a second a guy came from behind, tore my husband's watch off his wrist, jumped on the back of a waiting motorcycle and off the two men went. It all happened very fast. A very, very nice shopkeeper phoned the police and everything was taken care of in a professional way," she said yesterday.

"I just want everyone to be on their guard and understand that what happened to us could happen to you," she said.

May wins support from divided UK government on plan

British Prime Minister Theresa May secured a cabinet agreement on Friday night for her plans to leave the European Union, overcoming rifts among her ministers to win support for "a business-friendly" proposal aimed at spurring stalled Brexit talks. After an hours-long meeting at her Chequers country residence, May seemed to have persuaded the most vocal Brexit campaigners in the cabinet to back her plan to press for "a free trade area for goods" with the EU and maintain close trade ties.

The agreed proposal - which also says Britain's large services sector will not have the current levels of access to EU markets - will not come soon enough for Brussels, which has been pressing May to come up with a detailed vision for future ties. But the hard-won compromise may yet fall flat with EU negotiators. By also committing to ending free movement of people, the supremacy of the European court and "vast" payments to the bloc, May could be accused of "cherry-picking" the best bits of the EU by Brussels officials, who are determined to send a strong signal to other countries not to follow Britain out of the door. See inside.

One person gored on opening day of Pamplona bull runs

Pamplona.—One person was gored on the first day of Spain's Pamplona bull running festival, the Red Cross said yesterday. The person was caught by a bull's horn during the 875-metre run through the northern Spanish city. Four other people suffered minor injuries such as grazes after falling. All five were taken to hospital for treatment. Around 2,000 people, most of them dressed in white and wearing red neck scarves, attend the sprint, running alongside six bulls and six bullocks on a narrow route that weaves through central Pamplona. Lasting just under two and half minutes, and taking place on wet ground following rain the night before, this year's sprint was slightly faster than average.
