80 percent of Balearic people have mobile phone addiction

● The findings show that there is increasing dependence on mobiles and that in some instances this can cause serious problems of addiction. The phenomenon is most evident in summer, when phone use is at its highest. Page 3

Spain defends hard line on North African border immigration

Spain will not tolerate violent attempts to enter the country, the government said yesterday, in response to criticism of its swift return of 116 illegal migrants to Morocco after they stormed the fence bordering one of its North African enclaves.

The country's southern shores have become the main gateway into Europe for migrants seeking a better life, ahead of Italy and Greece, particularly since Italy's new populist government began refusing to admit rescue boats.

Human rights groups complained the return was carried out too quickly to give the migrants access to legal assistance and interpreters, and to identify asylum seekers, while political opponents criticised the government's approach as inconsistent.

Spain's Socialist Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez, who took office in June, put migration at the heart of his new government's policies when he agreed to receive more than 600 migrants aboard a charity-run ship, the Aquarius.
