BREXIT DEAL "WITHIN DAYS," SAYS TORY LEADER

London.—A Brexit deal could be reached by negotiators from Britain's Conservative and Labour parties within a few days, the leader of Scotland's Conservatives, Ruth Davidson, said.
 "We are getting closer and closer. There is not that much between the two main parties as I understand it within the room," she told reporters at a party conference in Aberdeen.

 "There is a deal that could be done in the next few days in quite short order, and I really hope we can get to that point."

NAME THE DAY, PM IS TOLD

London.—British Prime Minister Theresa May should announce her departure date following poor local election results, former Conservative leader Iain Duncan Smith said yesterday, renewing an earlier call for her to go before this month's European elections.

Theresa May was now a "caretaker prime minister", Duncan Smith told LBC radio. May needed to set an immediate date for her departure, or a committee of senior Conservative members of parliament should do it for her, LBC reported him as saying.

UK police say will not investigate Huawei leak that felled defence minister

London.—British police said they will not probe a leak of information about Chinese telecoms company Huawei that cost Gavin Williamson, pictured, his job as defence minister this week, as no criminal offence was committed. Williamson strenuously denied being responsible for the leak, but May said she had lost confidence in him, after the Daily Telegraph newspaper reported discussions from within Britain's National Security Council. "I am satisfied that what was disclosed did not contain information that would breach the Official Secrets Act," Britain's top counter-terrorism police officer, Metropolitan Police assistant commissioner Neil Basu, said yesterday.

 "The leak did not cause damage to the public interest at a level at which it would be necessary to engage misconduct in a public office. It would be inappropriate to carry out a police investigation in these circumstances."
