Party-goers and bull-running fans packed the main square in Pamplona yesterday to cheer the launch of a firecracker which marks the start of the northern Spanish city's annual San Fermin festival.

Decked out in white t-shirts and trousers stained pink by the wine that flows freely at the festival, the crowd danced and waved traditional red handkerchiefs bearing the image of the local patron saint. The "chupinazo" rocket fizzed into the sky at midday, officially opening festivities during which specially bred bulls chase runners through an 800-metre (0.5 mile) stretch of narrow streets each morning at 8 a.m.

Over one million people attend the festival each year.
