Get back to work, says Prime Minister Johnson

British Prime Minister Boris Johnson will tell employers next week to start ordering staff back into their places of work, as long as it is safe to do so, in order to stem the coronavirus hit to the economy, the Daily Mail said. Johnson has told top civil servants to set an example by starting to return staff to their desks and he has also asked companies including Goldman Sachs to get more employees back after working from home, the newspaper said. The prime minister would announce the change in an update on coronavirus next week, it said. On Friday, Johnson said he thought it was time for people to start shifting away from working from home. “I want people to go back to work as carefully as possible,” he said in a question-and-answer session with members of the public. “It’s very important that people should be going back to work if they can, now. I think everybody’s taken the ‘stay at home if you can’ (advice). I think now we should say ‘go back to work if you can.’”

Britain’s economy shrank by 25% over March and April as the coronavirus pandemic escalated and the government ordered entire sectors to shut down.

TOURISTS CANCEL OVER FACE MASKS

● There's been a wave of hotel reservation cancellations from Germany and Britain since the Balearic Government announced that it will be compulsory to wear a face mask in all public spaces from Monday (tomorrow), according to the Balearic Hotel Chain Association, or ACH and the Mallorca Hotel Business Federation, or FEHM.
