Left-wing leader says he and govt minister get death threat letters

Madrid.—Spanish Interior Minister Fernando Grande-Marlaska and the leader of the left-wing Unidas Podemos party Pablo Iglesias have received death threat letters, Iglesias said. “Your wife, your parents and you are sentenced to the capital punishment, your time is running out,” the anonymous letter said, according to a picture posted by former deputy

Prime Minister Iglesias on Twitter. He also posted a picture of four bullets which he said had come in the envelope. Iglesias said the interior ministry had told him it considered the threats serious and police were investigating. “I hope some arrests will happen,” he told the state broadcaster TVE. The interior minister and the head of the Guardia Civil police force received similar letters, Iglesias said. He did not say if bullets were enclosed. Grande-Marlaska did not make any official comment. Pony-tailed Iglesias has emerged as one of Spain’s main political leaders after Podemos, created in 2014 and later renamed Unidas Podemos, became the main group on the far-left.

JAB AND GO TO MAJORCA

One vaccination jab will be enough to send you on holiday to Majorca this summer. Coronavirus passports, which the European Union is officially calling “Digital Green Certificates,” will allow citizens of Europe to enter Spain without having to quarantine or take a coronavirus test. The document will come in the form of a free QR code, will be available by the end of June, and will allow for “more people” to arrive in the country “in a safer manner.” With much of the British population now vaccinated it could mean that thousands of British tourists could be heading to our shores sooner rather than later. See Inside
