● "The other thing that's a big danger, I think, is that some people haven't worked in the hospitality industry for over a year now. It could be nearly two years, because theoretically the last time people worked properly was October 2019. It's going to take time for people to get back into it, for businesses to get back up to it, but we can't have a period of four weeks when everybody's getting up to speed. We've got to hit the ground running quality and service wise."

● "We've got to get this industry back on its feet, and the best way we're going to do this is by engendering confidence in travellers."

● "I think the question about Magalluf remains. What are the government's plans for Magalluf? Do they want to take it up-market?"

"We will be back in Majorca very soon"

● Steve Heapy, the Chief Executive of Jet2, gives a wide ranging interview to the Bulletin and says that the holiday giant should be back on the island next month. See Pages Six to Eight Inside.

Spain hopes for swift end to spat

Madrid.—Morocco's ambassador to Madrid warned yesterday if Spain allows the leader of the Western Sahara independence movement to leave Spain without informing Rabat it will worsen the diplomatic crisis between Morocco and Spain.

Brahim Ghali has been treated at a Spanish hospital since April after being diagnosed with COVID-19, a move which angered Morocco and led to Rabat relaxing border controls which allowed thousands of migrants to enter Spain's North African enclave of Ceuta on Monday.
