Spain's 14-day COVID-19 contagion rate falls below 200 for first time in two months

Madrid.—Spain's two-week COVID-19 contagion rate fell below 200 cases per 100,000 inhabitants for the first time in over two months, according to health ministry data.

The 14-day contagion rate was 198, the first time it has dipped below 200 cases since July 2, the health ministry said.

The health ministry said 71.5% of the population are fully vaccinated, while 39.4% of people aged 12 to 19 have received both doses of a vaccine.

Since the pandemic started, 4,877,755 people have tested positive for COVID-19 in Spain while the death toll rose to 84,795 on Friday, the health ministry said.

MORE SPENDING NEEDED ON TOURISM, SAY HOTELIERS

● Calls for changes within the holiday industry by the Mayor of Calvia welcomed by hoteliers who say that more public spending is needed.
