THE BIG FREEZE

Cold front will hit this weekend.

Palma.—Mallorca will go from enjoying higher temperatures than normal for the time of year to below average, as a “sharp drop” is expected over the weekend, according to Bernat Amengual, deputy spokesperson for the State Meteorological Agency (Aemet) in the Balearics.

From today the weather in Mallorca will begin to take a dive as the cold front hits with rain and thunderstorms in the evening with a strong southwesterly wind. Temperatures will remain high and could reach 20°; minimum temperatures will not drop below 11°-14°.

However, on Saturday there will be a “sharp” drop in temperature with daytime highs of 14°-16° - colder than normal for this time of year. Showers and thunderstorms are also forecast. The wind will be from the southwest with some strong gusts turning north during the morning. The Aemet forecast for Sunday is for cloudy intervals and scattered showers. The cold will continue to be the main feature of the day. Amengual said there will be no improvement until Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.
