“WE WOULD OPEN OUR ARMS TO BRITAIN
REJOINING EU”

Madrid.— Spain's Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez and France's President Emmanuel Macron expressed enthusiasm this week for Britain rejoining the EU and agreed Europe must strengthen its trade defences against China.

British Prime Minister Andy Burnham floated the prospect of Britain rejoining the EU in an interview, which Macron described as “excellent news” and a “good decision”.

Speaking after Macron's first state visit to Spain, Sanchez described the neighbouring countries as leaders of Europe's “resistance to enemies of our continent and the European model”, as both nations gear up for elections next year in which the far right is expected to make significant gains.

The two leaders also called for greater flexibility in finding additional resources for the bloc ahead of EU budget negotiations in October, with Sanchez appealing for “a little more empathy” from Brussels for governments “on the frontlines trying to respond to citizens' concerns”.

Spain and France are among a group of countries concerned that the pressure from major net contributors to the EU budget such as Germany and the Netherlands to cut available funds by several hundred billion euros would worsen inequality and reduce funds for farmers, a key election issue, among many others.
